00000000000 🗢 000000000000 SHORT STORY OF THE DAY

600000000000 & 00000000000 ON THE HURRICANE DECK.

From the New Orleans Times-Democrat. The other passengers had gone below to the stuffy staterooms, only to toss on heated pillows, while the mosquitos did their worst.

It was II o'clock. Long ago the fat barher and the head waiter had taken their guitars and cracked voices into the Texas. The Louislana planter gave several vigor ous and audiole yawns; then he, too, went below to his torture.

The Martha B. Adams slowly and persist ently putted along upstream with her cargo of sugar and molasses and sweltering humanity. The not day had reluctantly surrendered to the night, and now the scorened ouries of the Onio looked cool and saivery in the inconlight.

"It's too hot to try to sleep," said the girl in the white place.
"Don't approprie for staying. It isn't necessary, rouget your conscience for an necessary. Forget your conscience for an hour. This is the last night, you know."

"Yes, I know," said the girl, thoughtfully. The man put his chair with its back against the guard rail. He could see her better now.

The moon shone full in her face.

Now and then her white hand flashed in the moonlight as she brushed back a wind-

Its it?

Thease don't. Of course it isn't to you.

It's only an incident. To-morrow night you'll be telling your friends what an uncomfortable trip you had. The people on the boat were so uninteresting. But there was one very mice intle man who orough.

You newspapers and fruit and margarance. you newspapers and fruit and magazines at the landings."
"You latter yourself, I'm afraid," laugh-ed the girl.

Yes, a suppose I'm an idiot to even hope that you would remember me the distance of the stageplank. But you needn't laugh." Away from somewhere in the depths of the boat came the voices of roustabouts singing a weird negro melody. The pilot-house with its lonely occupant—the great smokestacks showing dark against the summer sky, the regular chag-cnug of the big wheels-all the familiar things that had been so great a part of their lives for had been so great a part of their lives for the past ten days now only reminded him sgain of the parting of their ways. He told himself that he had known just how it would be from the first.

Confound it all! Why didn't he bolt and go by rail, instead of staying to have his feelings trampled upon by heartless girls? He would have been far safer in the smoking room of the limited.

Do you know"—the low, musical voice of the Girl had roused him from his reverle—"I think it is almost better not to make new friends if one has to give them up at the very start."

up at the very start."

The Man's heart began to thump, and something seemed to be the matter with head. Now there is Mrs. Templeton"—the Man ground his teeth-"she has been lovely to me, and I'm sure we could always be the best of friends. She has told me all about her mother and her brother in the navy. Her mother must be charming. To say nothing of the brother" men-

"And now she-I mean her husband-has been ordered to Venezuela. She got the telegram to-day; and I know I'll never-"Poor little girl! You have your trou-bles, too-don't you?"

"Yes, too. You know I'm so sorry to part with that gentle barber, and the en-gineer, and the pilot." Now wait we nevermore. "You needn't make fun of me! I am fond of Mrs. Templeton." "Pompadour, complexion and all, I sup-

Then the licutenant could hear that low night, I'm going. Last night you pretended to think that I filtred with the boy who came on at Cairo. Just because I wasn't rude enough not to read that crazy book he lent me."

The man put his hand on the arm of her chair as if to detain her. "If you'll stay I'll try to stiffe my grief about the barber. Won't you let me tell you about—about my brother, for instance?"

The Girl looked away toward the Kentucky hills. After awhile she leaned over and clasped her hands on the guardrail, Then she looked up into his face and her voice was almost a whisper: "If you'll salow of the group of singers now, sitting in the about yourself."

The man put his face and her work a uniform. There are several don't care—I'd rather you would tell me about yourself."
